PRIORITY-SETTING WORKSHOP FOR THE ASIA-PACIFIC REGION

TELL THE CGIAR WHAT MATTERS FOR POVERTY REDUCTION

How should the CGIAR Research Program on Policies, Institutions, and Markets* prioritize its various research areas for the Asia-Pacific region? This workshop wants to ensure that the program targets the region's specific policy research needs. The program's goals are to:

- Reduce rural poverty
- Increase food security, nutrition, and health
- Improve sustainability of natural resources, and
- Enhance opportunities for and participation of women

MAKE A DIFFERENCE!

Following a series of presentations on food policy research priorities from high-level regional experts, you and your colleagues will discuss the future of food policy research in the Asia-Pacific region, and then engage in a participative priority-setting exercise.

Through innovative "digi-voting" you will be able to make your voice heard and help set research and funding priorities for the program.

The results of this priority-setting exercise will influence the research that IFPRI and other international, regional, and national research centers will be conducting in the Asia-Pacific region over the next five years.

* The CGIAR is a global research partnership for a food secure future. The CGIAR Research Program on Policies, Institutions, and Markets, launched in January 2012, aims to identify the policies and institutions that will enable rural smallholders to increase their incomes through better links with markets and equitable access to services and assets. This program is led by IFPRI in partnership with 10 other research centers.
